

JOE FERRARIO

Genre: Bluegrass Music

Vocal, Bass, Mandolin

BAND - Stillhouse Road

Joe is a Santa Barbara, California native. He spent his early years developed his bass-playing style and performing with many local bands. He then moved to Los Angeles to join David and Darby Walker of Fifteen Minutes, which was signed by Chrysalis Music/EMI. After returning to Santa Barbara, he collaborated with Kenny Warren and Frank Sunseri to form Lost Cowboy Music Publishing, and the popular country band Spaghetti Western. The band released three studio albums, "A Fistful of Pasta", "Spaghetti Western" and "Pasta La Vista". The band also developed an association with Richard Mears of Curb Records, and performed with many major Nashville artists, including Carlene Carter, the Smokin' Armadillos, Mark Collie, BR5-49, Jessica Andrews, Paul Brandt, Steve Azar, and John Barry. A notable songwriting credit for Joe includes "Lost Cowboys" (co-written with Kenny Warren), which was featured in the movie "The Devil's Playground."

It was only after moving to St. George that Joe found his true calling in bluegrass music. His songwriting style was a perfect match. Fans of Stillhouse Road frequently point to Joe's original songs as definite favorites, including "Done Her Wrong" and "Oh How Long" for their up-tempo beat, and "Little Lulu" for its mournful 'old-tyme' feel. Also popular are his one-of-a-kind smokin' bass solos cleverly inserted into the few special classic country songs in their song list. Since the inception of Stillhouse Road, Joe has taken on the mandolin, bringing both sparkle and punch to the band's music. He is also a talented vocal artist, either in the forefront as lead vocalist or blending seamlessly on harmony.

Joe is definitely an original, and his natural charm greatly adds to the duo's down-home stage presence.
